How Swachh Bharat Abhiyan can be more effective

- Firstly, we need to define various aspect of Swachh Bharat. It's not just about making toilets. It's also about littering, garbage dumping - entire waste management, air pollution, water pollution, soil pollution; spitting etc.
- Secondly, set guidelines for broader level of changes in each of those segments and then set up teams who can gather more granular and ground level information. Because each place and issue will have some aspect of its own that needs to be corrected.
- Thirdly, we require a massive cultural change in this. The government should set up workshops and meetings along with all possible entities such as local residential welfare associations, market associations, company campuses, IT parks etc. to talk motivate people to change their habits for a cleaner India.

What extra effort should be put to push SBA to success?

- Whether it is solid waste management or open defecation, there needs to be focus on behavioral change along with providing physical infrastructure.
- An independent monitoring survey mechanism should be in place to check cases of corruption. For instance- In some villages, different people were found to pose with the same toilet to inflate number of toilets constructed.
- Focus should not only be on completing numbers of constructed units but the qualitative change needs to be brought into the society.
- Awareness programs need to be launched to aware people about the benefits of using toilets and weed out misinformation about use of such toilets and to break traditional practices.
- Rather than monitoring how many toilets have been created, a monitoring mechanism should be developed which reports the level of open defecation gone down; how many toilets constructed are being put to use; amount of solid municipal waste reduced; percentage of cleanliness achieved etc.
- Focus could have been - No Manual Scavengers.
